CASPER, Wyo. (AP) - The University of Wyoming is offering a new Masters of Business Administration program for students who want to work in the energy industry.

About eighty spots will be available in the first year of the MBA energy management program this fall. Half of the spots will be reserved for online students.

MBA director Marty Saffer said only a handful of schools across the country offer such a degree.

Energy accounting and energy trading will be among the courses offered in the 16-month program. Tuition for in-state students will be $22,000 a year.
