LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) - The Nebraska auditor's office says the University of Nebraska broke state law by delaying release of data sought for an audit.

A recently released audit report says university was required to immediately provide the information. The data are related to the university's health insurance program.

University officials say privacy concerns caused the delay, but the information eventually was released.

The university is self-insured. It paid more than $100 million in claims during fiscal 2010.
